ABSTRACT

Approximately five years ago, the University of Mary Hardin-Baylor added a unique, practical work experience requirement to the customary graduation requirements for an undergraduate business degree. This paper examines the perceived value of this requirement from the perspective of the students (now alumni) who have been subject to the requirement and the full-time faculty who advise undergraduates. 90% of the responding alumni believe that this practical requirement is a good idea, has been valuable to them and should be enhanced and continued.

INTRODUCTION

In 2002, the College of Business (CoB) at the University of Mary Hardin-Baylor (UMHB) in Belton, Texas adopted a unique, additional requirement for graduation. All undergraduate students with a business major were required to acquire at least 300 hours of practical work experience that was closely related to their academic field of study prior to graduation. The practical experience could be obtained through full-time employment, part-time employment, an internship, an apprenticeship, international experience, co-op, or student teaching.

Since none of the 31 AACSB accredited Colleges of Business in the state of Texas have a similar requirement, the perceived usefulness and value of this unique practical experience requirement deserves study. To explore this requirement, two separate (but related) surveys were conducted. One survey was conducted among UMHB alumni who have been subjected to the requirement and the other was conducted among full-time faculty of the CoB who teach and advise undergraduate students.

A web-based survey tool was used to administer each survey. An e-mail was sent explaining the purpose of the study and asking them (alumni and faculty separately) to click on a link that would take them to the appropriate on-line survey. The e-mail addresses for the alumni were obtained from the UMHB Alumni office. Each survey took approximately 5 to 10 minutes to complete. A copy of the alumni survey is at Appendix A and a copy of the faculty survey is at Appendix B.

ALUMNI RESULTS

A total of 369 valid e-mail addresses for university alumni from 2002 through 2007 were received from the university's Alumni Office. A total of 83 alumni responded to the survey, which represents a response rate of over 22 percent. The breakdown of the response rate by class year is shown below in Table 1.

Table 1
Response Rates for Alumni

Class Year	Valid E-mail	Responses	Rate
2002	52	6	12%
2003	74	18	24%
2004	66	18	27%
2005	45	8	18%
2006	73	16	22%
2007	59	17	29%
Total	369	83	22%

The survey asked how the requirement for practical experience was viewed when the alumni was a student. The results are shown below in Table 2:

Table 2
Alumni View of Requirement as a Student

Alumni View when a Student	Percent of Response
Absolutely Necessary	20%
Useful and Meaningful	44%
Burdensome and Difficult	18%
Changed View from Negative to Positive	17%
Unnecessary	1%

Over 60% of the alumni felt the practical experience helped them in their job search after graduation. The (open-ended) reasons for how the 300 hours of practical work experience helped them in their job search are shown below in Table 3 below.

Table 3
Requirement Helped in Job Search

Helped in Job Search	Percent of Response
Distinguished Me from Other Applicants	50%
Improved my Resume	35%
Improved my Skills	12%
Improved my Confidence	3%

Some alumni explained that the experience allowed them to identify their own strengths and weaknesses in the workplace. Other alumni said the practical experience allowed them to discover their own interests in their academic field. In fact, one respondent said the practical experience made him realize he didn't like his field of study, so he changed his academic major. Four alumni said they were hired full-time after graduation by the business that gave them the practical experience. Only one respondent said the practical experience did not help them in their job search.

52% of the alumni said the required work experience helped them perform better at their first job. The most frequently mentioned (open-end) areas identified included:

- Helped me to deal with co-workers
- Made me pay more attention to details
- Taught me about workplace etiquette

- Taught me about customer service
- Gave me self-confidence
- Taught me about time management
- Taught me how to take constructive criticism

To capture the alumni's overall perspective on the 300 hour practical experience requirement, they were asked what they thought of the requirement. 90% of the surveyed alumni thought the requirement was a good idea and should be continued. The most common (open-end) reasons given for their support of the requirement were:

- Students can't learn everything they need to know in a classroom
- Experience gives UMHB graduates an advantage over other college graduates
- Gives the students the skills they need to be successful after graduation
- Forces students to gain work experience they won't obtain on their own initiative
- Helps students learn about their chosen field of academic study

While there was clearly strong support for the continuation of the practical experience requirement, 40% of the alumni felt that some modification to the requirement or its administration would make it more valuable. The most frequently mentioned modifications suggested were:

- Provide more assistance to the students to locate a job, internship, co-op, etc.
- Establish more business partners who are willing to provide the experience to students and have pre-approved positions
- Allow any relevant experience received before transferring to the university to count towards this requirement
- Ensure all undergraduate students with a business-related major be informed of this requirement during their first semester of classes
- Reduce the number of hours required

FACULTY RESULTS

The 12 full-time faculty in the CoB who provide most of undergraduate teaching and advising completed the faculty survey. They were asked to explain (open-end) their understanding of why the CoB had the 300 hours of practical experience requirement. The most common responses were:

- To ensure students can apply classroom lessons to real world situations
- To give students insight into what their academic profession involves
- Employers want college graduates to have practical experience
- To help the students network for future employment
- To differentiate our graduates from other colleges and universities
- To enhance the appeal of our graduates to future employers

The faculty was asked how they thought most students find a qualifying practical work experience. The faculty estimated that 83% students found their experience opportunity through their own initiative. 17% were estimated to have used a faculty referral.

In terms of the estimated difficulty in finding a qualifying experience, the faculty felt that only about ¼ of the students had a somewhat or very difficult time. The results are shown below in Table 4 below.

Table 4
Level of Difficulty to Find a Position

Level of Difficulty	Est. Pct of Students
Very Easy	20%
Somewhat Easy	27%
Average	28%
Somewhat Difficult	20%
Very Difficult	7%

An important question with respect to any experience requirement is the “quality” of the experience relative to the objective of providing a relevant and meaningful learning opportunity. While the CoB has identified specific types of experiences that are considered appropriate, individual students may not always be able to find a fully satisfying opportunity. The faculty was asked how they would describe the “quality” of the practical work experience that the students were receiving. The results of this question are shown below in Table 5.

Table 5
Level of Quality of Actual Positions

Level of Quality	Est. Pct of Students
Challenging	29%
Above Average	24%
Adequate	23%
Marginal	14%
Barely Meets Requirement	6%
Doesn't Meet Requirement	4%

When asked if they thought the 300 hours of practical experience gave our graduates a meaningful advantage over other colleges and universities in obtaining employment, 75% of the faculty agreed. The most common reasons are shown below:

- Being able to show the successful application of classroom knowledge in a real business environment
- Experience proves to potential employers that the graduate can perform in their field and has the necessary skills to be successful
- Provides our graduates with contacts and good references in their field
- Employers often think recent college graduates are book-smart but lack practical experience
- Improves the student's confidence that they can perform in their academic field of study

Finally, the faculty was asked if they thought the requirement for 300 hours of practical experience should be continued as is, modified in some way, or terminated. Two thirds of the faculty said the requirement should continue as is without any change. One third of the faculty thought the requirement should be continued, but modified in some way. The most common modifications recommended were as follows:

- A faculty mentor should be assigned to each student to assist the student in locating a qualifying position, co-op, or an internship.
- The 300 hours of practical experience should count towards 3 or 6 credits of coursework to reduce the cost, time, and effort of an undergraduate degree. Maybe the 300 hours could substitute for another course or two that is required now.

CONCLUSIONS

With 90% of the surveyed alumni believing the requirement for practical experience is a good idea, the value of this unique graduation requirement is validated by its target “customers”. This practical experience helped them get their first job (60%) by distinguishing them from other applicants.

52% of the alumni said the required practical experience helped them perform better during their first job after graduation. Most of the alumni said the work experience helped them to deal with co-workers better and pay more attention to detail during their first job, skills that will be beneficial throughout their careers.

Like many other graduation requirements, the perceived value of the practical experience requirement changed over time for many of the students. While 44% of the alumni felt the requirement was useful and meaningful when they were students, another 17% admitted to changing their opinion about the requirement from a negative view to a positive one while they were undergraduate students.

From the faculty perspective, 75% said the requirement for 300 hours of practical experience gave our graduates a meaningful advantage over the graduates from other colleges and universities. The most common reasons given for this advantage include the application of classroom knowledge in a real business environment and the ability to perform successfully in their academic field.

RECOMMENDATIONS

While there is clearly strong support from both the university alumni and the faculty to continue the practical work experience requirement as a part of the CoB’s graduation requirements, significant portions of both the alumni (40%) and the faculty (33%) feel that some modifications to the requirement or improvements to how it is administered could make it even more valuable.

The alumni would like to see more assistance given to the students in helping them locate a qualifying position. They suggested the College of Business establish more partnerships with local businesses to develop a list of “pre-approved” positions. One suggestion from the faculty was to assign a faculty “mentor” for each student early in their academic experience at the university to assist the student in finding a qualifying position.

The alumni also emphasized how important it is to inform all undergraduate and transfer students in the College of Business about this requirement as early in their academic program as possible. The College of Business may want to determine the specifics (when, where, and how) about the best time to inform new students about this requirement so they can plan their activities.

Several of the alumni said they had years of work experience in their academic field of study before attending the university. However, this work experience did not count toward the 300 hours required for graduation. The College of Business should consider whether prior work experience should count if the student can obtain necessary written evidence that it does relate to their academic major.

Several of the alumni suggested the number of hours should be reduced and one former student said the number of hours should be increased. The College of Business should reevaluate if 300 hours is the appropriate amount of time for this requirement.

Finally, some of the faculty raised questions as to types of experience being counted as “qualifying” while others suggested the possible consideration of counting the 300 hours of practical experience toward actual coursework in a student’s degree plan.

All of the recommendations mentioned above are an attempt to improve a graduation requirement that clearly has the overwhelming support of both alumni and faculty. We believe the College of Business should examine, discuss, and evaluate each of these recommended modifications to the current requirement to determine their feasibility and usefulness.
